

Deprcon warning 16/11/20: The US Presidential election

Summary:

- We have received a disturbing amount of information pointing to a voter fraud in the U.S. Presidential elections.
- The information is in the form of statistical anomalies and also affidavits by witnesses stating that a large number of postal ballots were delivered to polling stations after they were closed.
- Wide-spread voter fraud thus looks possible, and could have serious and unforeseen economic and political ramifications across the Western World.

Since U.S. election day on November 3rd, we have been receiving data and information from American sources regarding statistical anomalies about voting in key battleground states.

Statistical anomalies include Vice-President Joe Biden receiving 100% of votes—especially late-arrival postal ballots—in several counties in decisive States. From a statistical point of view, there might be a few such occasions spread across the entirety of the U.S., but the fact that, according to the information we have received, such events have been concentrated on the battleground states is unlikely to the point of statistical impossibility.

The number of witness statements concerning vote counting in secret after the counting had officially stopped, and late-night deliveries of postal ballots in the range of tens or even hundreds of thousands, have also reached disturbing levels based on the information we've received. Information is mostly from private sources we consider trustworthy.

This is why we are announcing an exceptional warning about the possibility of wide-spread voter fraud favoring V.P. Biden. We are not saying that this has happened, but based on the evidence we've seen, we must acknowledge the possibility of it.

The evidence we have seen is actually so compelling that even if, for some reason, courts do not act upon it, it may still convince a great number of supporters of President Trump that real voter-fraud has taken place. This greatly increases the likelihood of serious division and even armed violence along the deep political fault lines in the U.S.

Alas, we urge our customers to be prepared for serious turbulence both in the financial markets and in the U.S. political landscape in coming weeks. The most extreme option, the outbreak of a civil war, as improbable as that may sound, unfortunately cannot be completely ruled out.

Godspeed!
